What's the Question?

Ada Gurkas

Is it possible to checkmate with only a king and two knights?

In most cases, the king and two knights cannot force checkmate. However, when they can, the result is often stunning.

Let's start by considering the simplest situation, when White has the two knights and Black has only his king left.

Working together, the king and pair of knights can slowly but surely push the enemy king into one of the corners:

1. Nd4 Kd8 2. Ke6 Ke8 If 2. ... Kc8, running towards a8, it takes White slightly fewer moves to force the black king into the corner. 3. Nc6 Kf8 4. Kf6 Ke8 5. Nb6 Kf8 6. Nd7+ Ke8 7. Nde5 Kf8 8. Nf7 Ke8 9. Nce5 Kf8 10. Nd6 Kg8 11. Nd7 Kh7 12. Nf5 Kg8 13. Kg6 Kh8

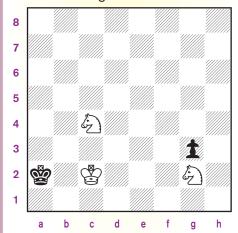

(See diagram, next column.)

Mission accomplished? Not quite. It is impossible to make further progress unless Black blunders a mate into a mate in one. For example, after 14. Nd6 Kg8 15. Nf6+ Kf8 (but not 15. ... Kh8 16. Nf7 checkmate) 16. Nd5 Kg8 17. Ne7+ Kf8, it is clear that White is getting nowhere. He could also try 14. Kf7 Kh7 15. Nf8+ Kh8 16. Ne7, with the idea of 17. Neg6#. Unfortunately, 16. Ne7 is stalemate!

As we saw in the previous position, a king and two knights simply cannot force checkmate against a lone king. Surprisingly, they often can win against a king and a pawn, though. The pawn prevents stalemate, allowing the two knights to form a mating net. Therefore the side with the pawn wants to get rid of it as soon as possible, while the knights try to avoid capturing it. Here is a study by the French composer André Chéron that illustrates some important ideas in this kind of endgame:

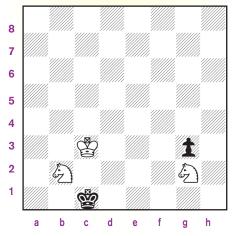

At first, it seems that White should just bring in his knight from g2 to b4 and then finish off the opponent with Nd2 and Nb3#. However, this idea proves to be too slow. For instance, if 1. Ne3, Black plays 1. ... g2!, threatening to queen, and White has nothing better than to take the pawn with a theoretical draw.

by FIDE Master Daniel Gurevich

Instead, White keeps blocking the pawn with the knight and uses the rest of his pieces to gradually herd the black king to a more vulnerable position. As we will see, White's main winning tool is Zugzwang, although he must be careful not to put himself in Zugzwang!

The first step of White's plan is to achieve the starting position with Black to move. 1. Kc3! Kb1 After 1. ... Ka1?! 2. Kb3, we get the position after 5. Kb3 in the main line of the solution. 2. Kd2! 2. Nb2? Kc1! puts White in Zugzwang-any move he makes allows the g-pawn to advance or the black king to escape. 2. ... Ka1 3. Kc1! Not 3. Kc2 Ka2, after which White would have to start over. 3. ... Ka2 4. Kc2! Zugzwang! After 4. ... Ka1 5. Kb3 Kb1 6. Nb2! Kc1 (or 6. ... Ka1 7. Nd3 Kb1 8. Kc3, transposing to the main line) 7. Kc3, we reach the position after 2. Nb2? Kc1, with the important difference that here it is Black's move.

The King sat at his chessboard, late into the night. The candle at his side guttered and threatened to go out. His friend entered the room, a long taper in her candlestick, "Are you all right, Your Majesty?" she asked, bringing more light to the table.

The King gestured toward the chess position in front of him.

"In my last game against my brother, I had the black pieces," he sighed, "and I was sure that my advanced pawns would win the game for me." The King made a few moves on the board, continuing "After 1. ... d3 2. cxd3 exd3 3. Bxd3, I discovered that there was no win for me—in fact, I was lost."

The King's friend nodded silently.

The King set the pieces back in place. "Afterward, when I looked at the position, I thought I had something with 1. ... d3 2. cxd3 and then the tricky 2. ... Bb5!?, but then his king could sweep in with 3. Kf4 and after 3. ... exd3 4. Bxd3 Bxd3 5. Kxe3 I could not make anything of my extra piece.

"I spent hours looking," the King moaned. "What a useless piece!"

A smile brightened the room further. "I am certain that you are correct," she said, examining the board. "In fact, I do believe that your "tricky" move wins for you—if you play it first, with 1. ... Bb5! Why not just get rid of that useless piece?"

The King played her move, then followed with 2. Bxb5 d3 3. cxd3 e2 with a laugh. "Now White's extra bishop is the useless piece!"

"White's king has no time to rush in, instead of capturing the bishop," she concluded. "2. Kf4 simply allows 2. ... Bxe2, and that would be a very useful piece."

The King smiled broadly.

After 7. ... Kb1, White takes the c1square away from the king with 8. Nd3. Next, White wants to reach a position with the white king on b3, the black king on b1, and Black to move. Using Zugzwang, he does just that: 8. ... Ka1 9. Kb4 Also correct is 9. Kc4 Ka2 10. Kb4. However, White should not play 9. Kb3?! Kb1, reaching the desired position but with White to move. 9. ... Ka2 10. Ka4 Ka1 11. Ka3 Kb1 12. Kb3 Done! After 12. ... Ka1, White can finally bring the g2-knight into the action with just enough time to checkmate. 13. Ne3! g2 14. Nc2+ Kb1 15.

Na3+ Note how White can keep improving his knight with check -setting this up was the whole point of the first 12 moves of the solution. 15. ... Ka1 16. Nb4 g1=Q Finally, Black queens ... 17. Nbc2# ... only to be checkmated immediately! The final position is especially nice.

Alexei Troitsky extensively analyzed the two knights versus a pawn endgame and established the "Troitsky line." Two white knights can deliver checkmate if the black pawn is blocked on or before the green squares.

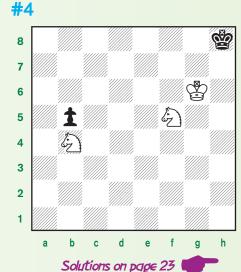

Of course, the line may move depending upon the position of the kings and the knights. Here are four positions. In each case, it's White to move and deliver mate. Can you work it out?

also very rare (in ChessBase's Mega Database 2014, only 370 out of about 5.8 million games reached it), so I suggest that you focus on studying, say, the much more common pawn endgames and rook endgames.

In conclusion, I would like to show you one of my favorite studies, composed by Petr Sobolevsky.

The white king threatens to take both of Black's minor pieces, but first White needs to get his own pieces out of danger. Since 1. Ngf8? or 1. Ne7? allows 1. ... Bd6, after which White would not have enough extra material to win, White's first move must be 1. Nh8+. If Black now plays 1. ... Ke6, 2. Kxh2 is easily winning (however, 2. Kxg2? Be5! lets Black trade off the bishops, with a draw). So Black must respond with 1. ... Kg8.

YOU CAN DO IT!

by Jon Edwards

It is well known, and worth knowing, that queens and knights generally work together better than do queens and bishops. That might surprise some of you because we know that bishops are generally better than knights on the open board.

Here's a fun example from the recent 11th Moscow Open played between Konstantin Nikologorskiy and Anton Korobov. It is Black to move.

There are many paths to the win here, but Black set about to win as efficiently as possible.

40. ... c4

White would like to use the Bc6 to help guide the a-pawn to the queening square on a8, but that plan is slow. Black sets his own pawn in motion. But can't White's queen just capture the pawn on c4?

41. Bb5

Trying to bring the bishop back into play, here challenging Black's advancing c-pawn.

After 41. Oxc4 Black would show off the harmony of an active queen and knight: 41.... Oxf2+ 42. Kh2 Og3+ 43. Kg1 Qe1+ 44. Kh2 Ng3 45. Oxh4 Nf1+ winning White's queen.

41.... Nd2

It's fun to see how well the queen and knight work together here. The knight now defends the c-pawn.

42. a4

Advancing the a-pawn towards its queening square.

42. ... Qd4

Continuing to defend the c4-pawn and the knight, but here also with the threat of ... Qa1+ and the idea of assisting the advance of the c-pawn to c3.

43. Qd1

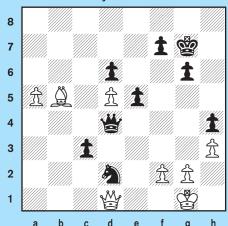

Preventing ... Qa1+.

43. ... c3

Advancing the pawn and further anchoring the knight.

44. a5

Sensing no danger, White presses forward on the queenside. Black now has a shot. Can you do it?

44. ... Nf3+

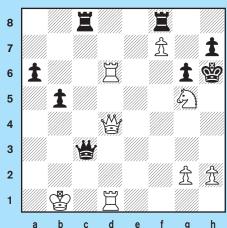

And White resigned. Take full credit if you favored 44. ... Ne4, but this knight check certainly is beautiful. White cannot capture the knight with the pawn because he would then lose his queen. And if 45. Oxf3 Black wins quickly with 45. ... c2 and a second black queen will appear on the board after 46. Qe3 Qd1+.

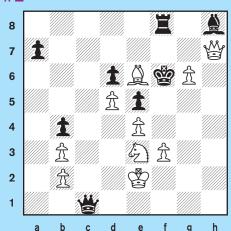

Quiz

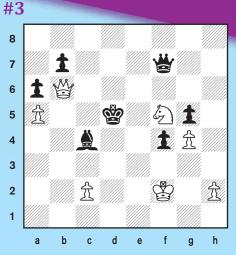

All positions are White to move and deliver checkmate in two moves.

OPPOSITE COLOR BISHOPS IN THE MIDDLEGAME PROBLEMS

In the February 2015 edition of Chess Life for Kids, we looked at some examples of opposite color bishop middlegames.

Now it's your turn to figure out how to win some of these exciting positions. Remember to keep the initiative—the player with the more active bishop as it is aimed at the opposing king usually wins.

The Squished Bish

Have you ever noticed, after 1. e4 e5, that good players don't usually follow with 2. d3?

I can see why they don't play 2. d4. Black will take it. But why not 2. d3?

For that matter, if White attacks the e-pawn instead with 2. Nf3, Black rarely protects it with 2. ... d6. Most people play 2. ... Nc6.

Is there something wrong with linking pawns so they protect each other?

Absolutely not. Pawns are the best protectors in chess. Pieces have better things to do with their lives than protecting measly pawns.

In fact, when pawns protect each other, it's such a good thing it gets a name. It's called a pawn chain. White's chain of linked pawns from c2-d3-e4 is a good thing.

A good thing, but not the best thing.

Pawns are best abreast

That means side by side. The problem with pawn chains is that they're rigid. It's hard to unchain them. It's much easier to make a pawn chain than to unmake one.

Keep pawns flexible and you can decide later to make this chain, or that chain, or no chain at all. It keeps your opponent guessing.

But once you lock into a specific chain your opponent knows exactly what to expect. It makes his job easier.

After 1. e4 e5 2. d3, Black already knows that White's pawns are in the way of his light-squared bishop and can develop a plan against that. Because White made the chain so early, he's blocking his bishop inside the chain.

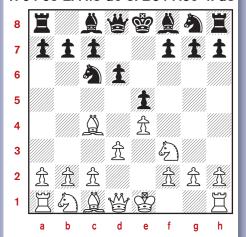

But even if he had developed the bishop first with 2. Bc4 and then played 3. d3, he'd be locking the bishop outside the chain. It could get trapped out there by a plan like ... Nc6 followed by ... Na5. Instead of inside and can't get out, it would be outside and can't get back in. There are problems to solve in both situations.

But for inexperienced chess players, I think it's usually better to activate the bishop before locking the pawns. To bring this point home, I label the bishop blocked in by its own pawns with a pejorative name. I call it ... The Squished Bish.

Not that there's anything wrong with squishing your bish. It's just passive and not as much fun. Let's say both sides settle for identical pawn chains, but White develops his bishop outside the chain, while Black squishes his by making the chain first.

1. e4 e5 2. Nf3 d6 3. Bc4 Nc6 4. d3

Black isn't in trouble because of this. He's on the defensive and has to be careful. But suppose he isn't, with a move like 4.... Nf6? Then White does gain a significant advantage with 5. Ng5! White's active bishop, outside the chain, is joined by the knight in an attack against the pawn on f7. A pawn, by the way, that Black has no satisfactory way to defend.

And if the situation is reversed? If White plays 5. Nc3 instead of 5. Ng5! and gives his opponent the first shot with 5... Ng4? Then Black's passively placed bishop, hiding on f8, no longer cooperates with the aggressively placed knight. White's f-pawn isn't even attacked.

Black's mistake was 4.... Nf6?, not 2.... d6. Squishing the bish put him in a passive, defensive position. As the defender, Black needed to realize that he had to defend. He should have foreseen 5. Ng5 with 4.... Be7!, using the squished bish to protect g5. Next move, he could have played 5.... Nf6, ready to answer 6. Ng5 with 6.... 0-0!, protecting the f7-target with his rook. This option wasn't previously available because the undeveloped bishop interfered with castling.

So Black wasn't losing before the mistake, but White was certainly having more fun. That's why I teach my beginning students not to squish their bish.

DETROIT CITY CHESS CLUB (DCCC) FACT SHEET

- Started in 2003 because of the success of the Detroit Duffield & Middle chess team. Markiya Alexander, an eighth grade girl, asked me "Where are we going to play chess if our high school doesn't have chess." I didn't know what to tell her so I sent ane-mail out to everyone on my e-mail list and one of my friends said "what about the Detroit Institute of Arts (DIA)." I didn't think we would set up shop at a museum but we met with the DIA and the rest is history.
- DCCC has brought in some of the world's best chess players: GM Maurice Ashley, Russia's GM Alexandria Kosteniuk (former Women's World Champion), International GM Irina Krush, GM Gregory Kaidanov (Former World Open Chess Champion), National Master Dr. David Allen, Dr. Daaim Shabazz (founder of www.thechessdrum. net), Ecuador's IM Martha Fierro, GM Ben Finegold, GM Alex Lenderman.
- UAW-Ford Vice-President James "Jimmy" Settles has been DCCC's biggest supporter and sponsor over the last decade. Mr. Settles has sponsored several national tournaments for DCCC students.
- Many of DCCC members are now in colleges and universities all over the United States such as University of Michigan, Michigan State University, Kentucky Christian, Howard University, Indiana Bible College, Alabama A & M, Alabama State University, Bowling Green University, Wayne State University, Tennessee State University, Eastern Michigan University, Ferris State University and many more.

- DCCC averages over 200 students per practice session (during the school year) and averages about 70 students per practice session (during the summer practices). Practice sessions are held Friday evenings from 4 pm-8 pm at the DIA.
- DCCC has impacted well over 500 students since the beginning.
- The Young Detroit Thinker (YDT) (DCCC's 501[c][3]) was formed out of the Detroit City Chess Club.
- YDT and DCCC have hosted over 25 chess tournaments in the city.
- DCCC has hosted several chess camps over the years.
- DCCC & YDT host the annual ALL-CITY CHESS program at the DIA featuring the top chess players from Detroit.
- Work, Rewards, and Fun! Chess is alive and well in Detroit!

SIT ON YOUR HANDS!

This is the first in a series of articles intended to inspire kids to play chess by tapping into the stories and wisdom of our best players. I've watched many generations of young players emerge and leave their marks on American chess. In many ways, their stories are your stories—learning to play, finding mentors, building confidence, and gradually learning to excel.

I'm asking our strongest players to reach back and remember the moments, people, games, and turning points that made them into chessplayers. I reached out to someone I've known for a very long time—former U.S. Champion and International Master Stuart Rachels, now teaching philosophy at the University of Alabama, a couple hours from my home.

Alabama Gold

Stu is the strongest chessplayer ever produced by Alabama. Shortly after I moved here for the first time in 1980, he broke Bobby Fischer's record as the youngest chess master in U.S. history—11 years and 10 months. He won the U.S. Junior Invitational in 1988 and shared the U.S. Championship with GMs Roman Dzindzichashvili and Yasser Seirawan in 1989.

I had not seen or spoken with Stu for a very long time—since the 1992 U.S. Open in Los Angeles—but his response to my proposal was warm and spontaneous. He offered to share a story from his early days in Alabama chess.

What strikes me most from this story is how much the game mattered to this young player. Over the years I've interviewed many strong players—the one thing they all have in common is how much chess matters to them—and how hard they've worked to learn what they know about the game.

Best Lesson

This is an excerpt from "Blunders," a chapter in Stuart Rachels' as-yet unpublished book, The Best I Saw in Chess: Games, Combinations, and Stories from an Alabama Prodigy Who Became U.S. Champion. Stuart Rachels retains all rights.

When you see a good move, sit on your hands. So goes the saying from the Soviet school of chess—and so true! The best lesson I ever got was when I was nine. I had known the moves for only a year, but I was beating Birmingham, Alabama's fifthbest player in the city championship round-robin tournament.

W: Michael Thornton B: Stuart Rachels Birmingham, Alabama, 1979

"Troton" threw everything at my king, but his attack fell short. The sacrifices had been exciting, so all the best players in my city had gathered around our board. Desperately, White tried 31. f5.

Now 31.... Oxf5+ is mate in two, but I was so excited that I didn't even look at White's move. [If you see a good move, look for a better one!] Instead, I dashed out 31.... Qa6+ 32. c4 dxc4. After punching the clock, I glanced up at Kyle Therrell—his approval meant the most to me. But Kyle was turning away and shaking his head. What's that all about? 33. Bh6 mate.

Out of Nowhere

White's bishop seemed to come zooming out of nowhere. It shattered me. I'm not sure when I wrote "B-R6 mate!" in jagged letters on my scoresheet, but seconds after the blow, I jumped up and ran outside. I was crying hysterically and was as angry as a nine-year-old can be. My father, who was directing the event, hustled out after me.

As I stormed down the sidewalk, he managed to catch up with me, but I was unfit for human company. He had to shout just to be heard over my hysterics. At one point, he got a step ahead of me and turned around—jogging backwards past the concrete streetlights on University Boulevard—and held up his hands, displaying his palms, so I could punch at them like a little boxer.

"Sometimes winning feels bad," Michael Thornton said to the other players after I ran out. But within a few months, I understood that this was the best thing that had happened to me as a player. Before this game, I often moved impulsively; I was an energetic little boy. But afterwards, I never did. One trauma cured me.

Post-Thornton, I always performed a neurotic last-moment blunder check. If I wasn't in time trouble or playing prepared moves, I would try to clear my head after deciding on my move—but before playing it—and ask myself, "Is there anything obvious I'm missing?" Thanks to this habit, I almost never hung pieces in rated games. And I never again got checkmated—not once.

I always resigned first.

#1 This position occurred in the 2008 Amber Blindfold Tournament in Monte Carlo, Monaco, between Boris Gelfand and Sergey Karjakin. Black has the more active bishop. He played 44. ... Rd3 (This is stronger than 44. ... Qh4+ 45. Qh3) 45. Qe1 Bg3 46. h6+ Kh8, White resigned (Along with the queen, 47. ... Qh4+ is threatened.) Open tactical positions are difficult to play blindfolded!

#2 White played 37. Bd3! (Black will have problems defending his light squares.) 37. ... e4+ (To open up the a1-h8 diagonal for the bishop to help defend.) 38. Bxe4 Qq7 39. Qe6+ Qf6 (If 39. ... #4 White sacrificed his rook with 40. Rxe6+! fxe6 41. Oxe6+ Kf8 42. Rg8+ Oxg8 43. Qe7 mate. A pretty finish with mate on the dark squares. This position is from the Rice Memorial Tournament, New York in 1926 between Abraham Kupchik and Isaac Kashdan.

#5 Aron Nimzowitsch was white against Alexander Alekhine in this game from Semmering, Austria in 1926. Nimzowitsch won this game on the light squares against the soon-to-be world champion after playing 41. f8=Q+ Rxf8 42. Qd5 Qd6 43. Qxb7+ Kd8 44. Rd3 Bd4 45. Qe4 Re8 46. Rxd4, Black resigned.
